Tuesday, April 23, 2013

Featured by EPA a member of the U.S. Global Change Research Program

EPA is marking the 43rd Earth Day by making extra efforts to expand the conversation on climate change. All this week, EPA will be highlighting its climate change research on the It All Starts with Science blog.

To kick off the week, hear what EPA's own Dr. Andrew Miller (Associate Director of Climate for the agency's air, climate, and energy research program) had to say on how EPA's work supports the protection of human health and the environment.